Self -assessment

The issue that I chose to explore for my final paper in English 1010 was that of Disciplining Children. The main points that I wanted to go into depth of are what boundaries parents have in using their own knowledge and methods of discipline, does the state have a say in what guardians can and cannot do to children?, and what is morally right.

For back up in my project I pulled quotations and statistics from outside sources. Mainly the internet, but also from my own guardians when I was a child. That is how I began my essay is with writing down a rubric to how my essay would flow. First I researched for ten different articles then I composed my Annotated Bibliography. Took it into class for one of my peers to help with some revisions then from the finished product I was able to dive into the essay itself, by adding in my own words, and thoughts which turned into my issue exploration essay,

I chose this topic because I figured most of college students (including myself) are looking at starting a family in the near future if not already in the full swing of it.

What I learned is that all people in the united states have their own techniques of handling children, not to mention the methods of different countries. No one child is raised the same.
